

Responding to Commercially Sexually Exploited and Trafficked Youth

A Blueprint for systems of care in New York State

Office of Children and Family Services

Blueprint Executive Summary

In 2012, OCFS launched Safe Harbour: NY - a coordinated, statewide child welfare-based response to victims and survivors of commercial sexual exploitation of children (CSEC) and child trafficking. The goal of Safe Harbour: NY is to increase the capacity of counties to identify these youth and provide services to CSEC and trafficking survivors. Safe Harbour: NY uses New York's child welfare and allied youth service systems as the primary coordinating body for this capacity building.

The program was launched in four counties and the five boroughs of New York City. By 2016, more than 22 counties were funded to engage in system-level responses to the needs of these vulnerable young people. The OCFS Responding to Commercially Sexually Exploited Youth: A Blueprint for systems of care in New York State (Blueprint) represents the accomplishments and lessons learned with these partner counties and includes emerging promising practices from the field. It is intended to serve as a road map for Local Departments of Social Services (LDSS) to respond to the needs of trafficked and sexually exploited youth in their localities¹.

This document outlines the steps to identifying a “critical team,” developing a training plan for county and partner agency staff, adopting standardized identification tools, and provides tips for conducting youth outreach and public awareness campaigns. It is important to note that additional guidance, policies and protocols pertaining to federal and state legislation not in effect as of December 2015 with regard to trafficking and CSEC are not contained in the document and will be issued separately². In addition, this document may be appended in the future.

This Blueprint covers the core elements of an effective local response to youth who are vulnerable, trafficked, or sexually exploited, but recognizes that many localities go above and beyond these standards to sustain the best possible service networks to care for these youth.

Safe Harbour: NY implements a system-level approach within existing child welfare and allied youth-serving systems, including Runaway-Homeless Youth programs (RHY), Probation, Persons In Need of Supervision (PINS), Youth Bureaus, and other critical partners. This approach leverages existing system strengths to create a more effective and efficient response to youth who have experienced commercial sexual exploitation or trafficking, or who are vulnerable to it. This Blueprint outlines steps counties can take to create or support this vital infrastructure to identify and provide effective services to youth and their non-offending family members.

A 2007 study commissioned by OCFS³ found that 85 percent of youth who were identified as commercially sexually exploited had prior child welfare involvement. Similarly, national statistics reflect that an estimated 68 percent of reported minors who were likely victims of sex trafficking were in the care of social services or foster care when they left home⁴.

The enactment of the federal *Preventing Sex Trafficking and Strengthening Families Act*⁵ further strengthens the responsibilities of child welfare systems to identify and provide services to youth who have experienced sex trafficking.

Child welfare systems have an obligation to create youth-and family-centered responses that build a web of protection and support. It is our hope that counties find this Blueprint to be a useful resource as they develop their local networks to support these youth.

Form a “Critical Team”

To develop an effective county-level response to the commercial sexual exploitation of children (CSEC) and child trafficking, a local network of stakeholders must jointly address system challenges. Although these local networks, or “critical teams,” may vary by locality, the steps below articulate the elements and processes undertaken by New York’s most successful teams.

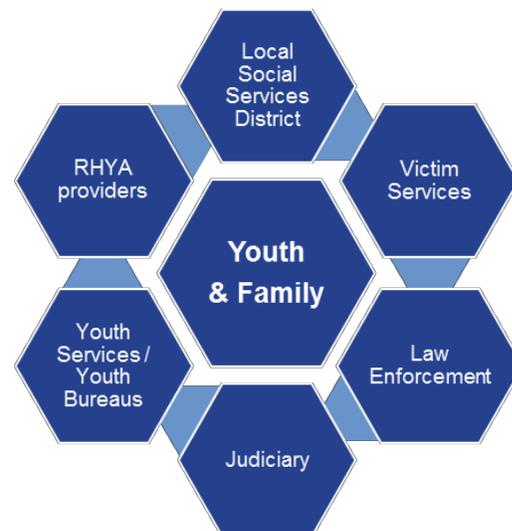

STEPS TO DEVELOP A “CRITICAL TEAM”

1. Identify local stakeholders.
2. Identify a lead agency responsible for ongoing meeting facilitation.
3. Designate a county Child Trafficking Coordinator.
4. Establish protocols or Memoranda of Understanding (MOU) if desired by membership.
5. Develop a County-Wide Asset Map.
6. Identify needs and service gaps.
7. Adopt necessary protocol and procedures.

1. IDENTIFY LOCAL STAKEHOLDERS

Although the makeup of each “critical team” will vary by local need, teams are most effective when they include, at minimum, representatives from the Local Department of Social Services (LDSS), Child Advocacy Center/ Multi-Disciplinary Team, Probation, and Runaway and Homeless Youth providers/coordinators. Other key partners to consider including are listed below:

- Youth Bureaus;
- Local, state and federal law enforcement;
- Prosecutors;
- Judges;
- Nongovernmental/ voluntary social service providers and advocates;
- Survivors;
- Health care providers;
- Mental health care providers;
- School systems;
- Immigrant services providers;
- Service providers for youth with intellectual and developmental disabilities; and
- LGBTQ⁶ service providers.

⁶ Lesbian, Gay, Bisexual, Transgender, Queer, or Questioning

2. IDENTIFY A LEAD AGENCY RESPONSIBLE FOR ONGOING MEETING FACILITATION

Once the “critical team” is formed, it is helpful to assign a lead agency to facilitate meetings, draft a work plan or group charter, and manage group projects. The LDSS may retain this leadership role or delegate the responsibilities to a youth-serving partner agency.

Should the county decide to delegate the leadership of the “critical team,” it is crucial that the LDSS function as an active partner in all leadership and decision-making processes, rather than approaching the relationship as a traditional contract for services.

3. DESIGNATE A COUNTY CHILD TRAFFICKING COORDINATOR

Designating a Child Trafficking Coordinator to maintain focus on these efforts and propel them forward is recommended, if funding permits. This role can be housed within the LDSS or in a partner voluntary agency. The coordinator would serve as the county’s point of contact for issues related to providing coordinated services to child victims of trafficking and exploitation. CSEC and trafficking cases often involve cross-county, inter-state and inter-agency needs—having a single point of contact can expedite county outreach for collaboration.

Example duties of a Child Trafficking Coordinator may include:

- Coordinate and facilitate the county-wide efforts of the “critical team” and subcommittee meetings;
- Coordinate efforts with OCFS and other stakeholder state and federal agencies;
- Represent county at regional task forces that respond to human trafficking;
- Provide guidance and oversight to programs that respond to trafficked and exploited youth in his or her county;
- Provide training to child welfare and other relevant professionals on CSEC, child trafficking, and related issues;
- Provide technical assistance on CSEC and child trafficking to local partners as requested;
- Coordinate data collection related to CSEC and child trafficking as requested by OCFS;
- Promote community awareness on CSEC and child trafficking; and
- Work collaboratively with other counties/jurisdictions as necessary.

It is recommended that this role is held by a professional with several years of experience in social work, public administration, or a similar discipline.

The person who fills this position should have, at minimum:

- A sound understanding of child trafficking and CSEC dynamics, including girls, boys, and LGBTQ youth exploited for both sex and labor;
- Direct experience working with trafficked, exploited, or vulnerable youth; and
- A demonstrated ability to facilitate multi-disciplinary groups to create change within systems.

For a sample Child Trafficking Coordinator job posting see, Appendix 1: Sample Child Trafficking Coordinator Job Posting

4. ESTABLISH FORMALIZED PROTOCOL OR MEMORANDA OF UNDERSTANDING (MOU) IF DESIRED BY MEMBERSHIP

Although not required, some “critical teams” may elect to have member agencies agree to a written MOU. Such an agreement should outline the team’s purpose and the common and unique responsibilities of each member agency.

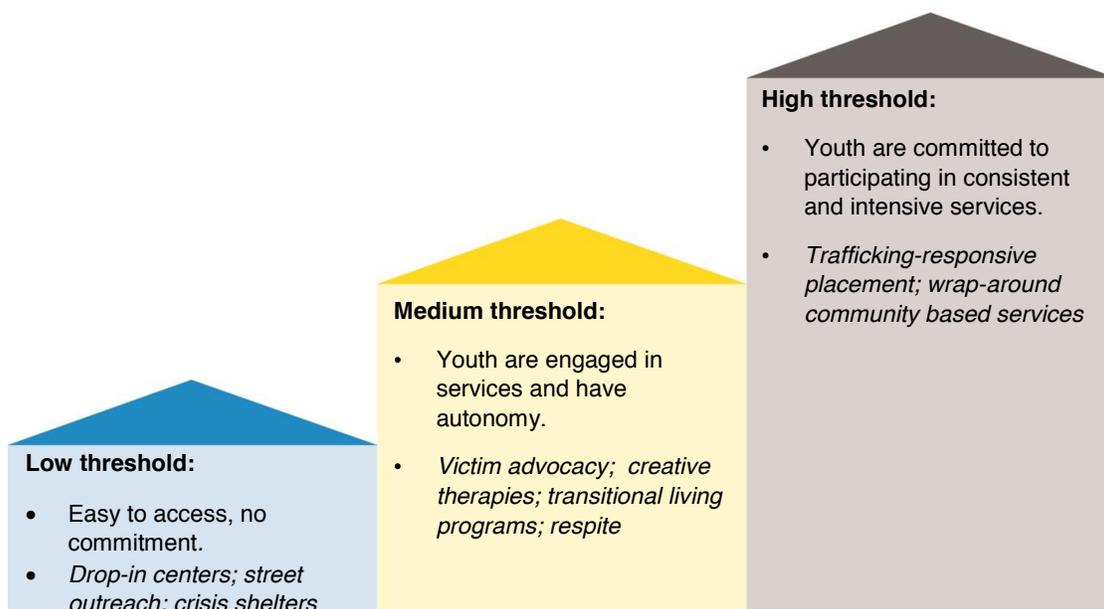

For a sample MOU pertaining to anti-trafficking work, see Appendix 2: Sample Anti-Trafficking MOU.

5. DEVELOP A COUNTY-WIDE ASSET MAP

Asset mapping is a useful exercise that builds a common understanding of the local infrastructure that currently responds, or could respond, to the needs of exploited and trafficked youth. Such an exercise will highlight organizations, individuals, funding sources, and other community strengths, and identify service gaps and unmet needs.

As the “critical team” considers the services available it is helpful to keep in mind that youth who have experienced CSEC or trafficking require a continuum of services, ranging from low-threshold services (like drop-in centers) to highly-structured residential placements. Services that respond to immediate crises are necessary, as are those that provide long-term, wrap-around services. Asset maps should include programs that meet a wide range of needs and service youth with a variety of philosophies.

Spectrum of Services to meet the needs of Trafficked and Exploited Youth

An asset mapping exercise can be conducted via a “critical team” brainstorming session, a survey that is administered to community based providers, or in another way that will meet the team’s needs.

In considering the services available it is important to know:

- The type of service(s) provided;
- The geographic territory covered by services (are services available in rural areas as well as urban centers?); and
- Limitations of qualifications for accessing the service (is the service available to any interested youth?).

In mapping the county’s assets, the “critical team” is encouraged to consider the many vulnerabilities faced by youth who have been trafficked or sexually exploited. Identifying services that can meet the needs of the youth populations listed below will position the county well to create a strong service response to youth who have experienced CSEC or trafficking and those at risk. A number of survivors of CSEC and human trafficking have gone on to create or inform service provision for other survivors.

Survivors and their non-offending family members who are stable and interested in giving back to the community can offer a wealth of expertise based on their personal experiences. Considering them assets in this mapping process can bolster the county’s response as it supports other survivors.

Partnering with survivor-run organizations when developing a local response can offer immense value.

Consider services that can meet the needs of:

- Male survivors of sexual assault;
- LGBTQ youth;
- Undocumented youth;
- Youth who do not speak English;
- Youth with mental health needs;
- Youth with developmental or intellectual disabilities;
- Youth with substance abuse issues;
- Youth with physical disabilities;
- Youth who left home or ran away from care;
- Youth who are too old to enter foster care but do not have supportive adults;
- Native American youth.

Once the county's assets have been identified, it is recommended that the local Child Trafficking Coordinator connect with a liaison from each organization to inform them of the "critical team" and its efforts. This network of organizations can be called upon by the team for support in screening and serving youth, participating in training or public awareness campaigns, or other activities. It may be helpful to create a county-wide or regional listserv for this network to keep key players informed of events and other developments.

6. IDENTIFY NEEDS AND SERVICE GAPS

After considering the strengths and existing services within the county, it's recommended that the "critical team" develop a mutual understanding of where gaps and needs in services remain.

Conducting a community-based needs assessment can:

- Build a shared understanding of the community's needs;
- Assist in setting priorities; and
- Reduce the likelihood of uncovering unforeseen issues once a response plan has been developed⁷.

There is no wrong way for a youth to access services! Services can be accessed voluntarily, as a condition of the courts, through the diversion services, or through a referral from a local social services agency.

A needs assessment exercise can be conducted via a "critical team" brainstorming session, a survey administered to community based providers, or in another way that will meet the team's needs. Needs assessments are strongest when they're conducted with input from those who work directly with youth who have been trafficked, sexually exploited, or are vulnerable to these issues.

Once the needs assessment is complete, the list of needs and gaps can be compared to the asset map. The team is encouraged to first consider where existing services can be enhanced through training, technical assistance, or funding (when available), rather than what new programs could be created. It is also helpful to consider which programs included in the asset map have developed strong working relationships with the county, have reputations of doing excellent work with youth, and are prepared to take on this work.

Youth who have experienced commercial sexual exploitation and trafficking are best served by:

- A continuum of services, ranging from low-threshold services (like drop-in centers) to highly-structured residential placements designed to serve this unique population;
- Services that respond to immediate crises and those that provide long-term care; and
- Services that operate from a variety of perspectives and philosophies (ranging from harm reduction to abstinence).

7. ADOPT NECESSARY PROTOCOL AND PROCEDURES

As the local body that sets standards for the county's response to trafficked and sexually exploited youth, establishing county-wide protocol and procedure is a central task of the "critical team"⁸. These protocols and procedures should guide local practice for youth who are identified and served by the many interlocking service systems. In the process of drafting these guidelines, careful consideration must be given to confidentiality and the youths' rights to participate in placement and service delivery decision making whenever possible and as required by law. Sample protocols are included in Appendix 3: Sample Protocol.

Develop a County Training Plan

A significant responsibility of the “critical team” is creating a plan by which training and other critical information related to CSEC and child trafficking can be disseminated throughout the county. The development and implementation of such a plan should support all youth-serving professionals to develop an understanding of child trafficking and CSEC; their unique roles and responsibilities; how to work collaboratively within their roles; and how to carry out their roles and responsibilities effectively to meet the needs of this population.

It is helpful for members of the “critical team” to participate in CSEC and human trafficking trainings together so a common understanding of the issue and common language can be developed. These trainings should include the perspectives and priorities of both service providers and law enforcement to help reinforce dialogue surrounding collaborative efforts and sharing in successful interventions. The “critical team” would likely benefit from participating in classroom and workshop style trainings where discussion is encouraged. If this is unavailable due to resource constraints, a number of free and low cost trainings, including webinars, computer-based trainings, and videos, are available.

For more information refer to Appendix 4: CSEC and Human Trafficking Training Resources.

STEPS TO DEVELOP A COUNTY-WIDE TRAINING PLAN

1. Establish training standards.
2. Consider free training resources.
3. Compile and analyze available trainings.
4. Create a list of agencies and other entities the team would like to train.
5. Determine which team members may present on behalf of the “critical team” and consider their relevant areas of expertise.
6. Develop a method by which organizations can request training.
7. Track trainings as they are provided.

1. ESTABLISH TRAINING STANDARDS

Establishing training standards at the onset of developing a training plan will enable the “critical team” to produce, endorse, or recommend trainings for county use. When drafting training standards, some items to consider include:

- What content should be included in a training;
- What philosophy guides the training content (e.g. promoting empowerment rather than ‘rescue’);
- What training formats are encouraged (PowerPoint, lecture, activities, webinar, etc.);
- What “critical team” materials can be shared, how, and with whom;

- Who can train on behalf of the “critical team”;
- Honoraria/compensation guidelines;
- Method(s) by which trainings offered by the “critical team” will be evaluated for effectiveness; and
- Other factors.

Once training standards are agreed upon, it is helpful to write them down and distribute them to each member agency of the “critical team”. Programs such as SharePoint or Dropbox can be helpful in managing shared documents.

2. CONSIDER FREE TRAINING RESOURCES

A number of free training resources are available. Collecting these resources for analysis will enable the “critical team” to eliminate the need to recreate materials. It might be helpful for “critical teams” to begin by identifying materials that have been produced using federal and New York State funds, as well as resources that have been produced by member agencies of the subcommittee. A list of resources is included in Appendix 4: CSEC and Human Trafficking Training Resources. Teams are encouraged to continue seeking out new resources as new materials are released on a regular basis.

OCFS created several computer-based trainings (CBT) which are accessible through the Human Services Learning Center (HSLC). A one-hour CBT titled Human Trafficking/Commercially Sexually Exploited Children (CSEC): An Overview provides an introduction to human trafficking subjects. Anyone with access to HSLC is encouraged to use this free resource.

An additional CBT titled Child Welfare Requirements for Identifying and Working with Sex Trafficking Victims is mandatory for some professionals per the Requirements to Identify, Document, Report, and Provide Services to Child Sex Trafficking Victims policy. This recorded video training can also be accessed through HSLC.

The following basics are included in OCFS' Safe Harbour: NY training materials, and should be incorporated in materials created or endorsed by the "critical team":

- Information pertaining to CSEC, sex trafficking and labor trafficking of girls, boys, and LGBTQ youth;
- Information about CSEC within the family, CSEC within gangs, and pimp-controlled exploitation;
- Information about survival sex, with an emphasis on the victim/survivor status of youth engaged in survival sex;
- Information on how to engage with challenging populations, including youth with histories of trauma and sexual victimization;
- Guidance on responding to exploited and trafficked youth using a trauma-informed approach;
- Information on how to identify exploited and trafficked youth;
- Issues related to the vulnerabilities of youth who left home, including runaways, youth who were kicked out by family members, and youth who have been kidnapped or abducted;
- The need for and value-added of a multi-disciplinary response; and
- The New York State confirmation process and other avenues through which youth can access services.

3. COMPILE AND ANALYZE THE AVAILABLE TRAININGS

Once training resources have been compiled, the team can determine which materials adhere to the agreed-upon training standards. In accordance with copyright terms, the team may publicly adopt and/or endorse some of these materials. Similarly, resources the team creates should be held to the same agreed-upon training standards. These materials and resources can be maintained in a resource library that all members can access. The library can be updated as the team identifies and approves new resources. Tools used to evaluate the effectiveness of trainings offered, such as surveys and evaluations, can also be stored using this shared platform.

4. CREATE A LIST OF AGENCIES AND OTHER ENTITIES THE TEAM WOULD LIKE TO TRAIN

In drafting a county-wide training plan, the "critical team" can develop a list of agencies, entities, and programs that are likely to encounter CSEC or trafficked youth and who may benefit from training. The list created during the 5. Develop a County-Wide Asset Map process can be used for this purpose. These entities can be alerted to the "critical team's" training resources and how they may be accessed. The team may share its library of endorsed training resources, and/or it may elect to offer in-person training for relevant agencies.

5. DETERMINE WHICH TEAM MEMBERS MAY PRESENT ON BEHALF OF THE “CRITICAL TEAM”

Should the team elect to offer in-person, web-based, or teleconference trainings, a system can be established that credentials “critical team” members to present on behalf of the group. The process can be simple (for example a vote of confidence from the team) or more formal (e.g. participation in a Train-the-Trainer program). A list of team members who may publicly speak on behalf of the “critical team” should be maintained and updated regularly. This list would include notes about each individual’s specific areas of expertise.

6. DEVELOP A METHOD BY WHICH ORGANIZATIONS CAN REQUEST TRAINING

Many online platforms can be used to solicit and accept training requests. Teams that choose to use such a platform can benefit from adopting a procedure that guides how training requests are received, processed, and delegated to team trainers. A thorough procedure will designate a point person(s) who is responsible for managing and responding to training requests, a timeframe by which requests should be answered, and how requests will be documented and calendared.

7. TRACK TRAININGS AS THEY ARE PROVIDED

A team member can be delegated the responsibility of documenting important information, including who was trained, how many participants attended, results from the training evaluations, and other data points as appropriate. The person who delivered the training may be assigned this responsibility, or the team may elect to delegate it to a central person, such as the local Child Trafficking Coordinator. This information can be useful in enhancing the effectiveness of future trainings, reporting progress to state and federal agencies, in informing local governance of the “critical team’s” efforts, and applying for funding.

Adopt Standardized Tools and Resources

A number of tools and resources have been developed to support appropriate identification of and service provision to youth who have experienced trafficking and commercial sexual exploitation. When used in combination with trauma-informed care principles, these tools can help counties leverage existing expertise and resources to properly respond to youth who have experienced trafficking and commercial sexual exploitation.

1. SCREENING TOOLS

Using a standardized screening tool can be helpful in identifying survivors of child trafficking and commercial sexual exploitation. A number of screening tools are available; “critical teams” are encouraged to consider each carefully against the needs of their county. After careful analysis, the “critical team” may recommend that one tool with standard protocol be adopted by each child-serving agency in their county, or to use multiple, complementary tools.

Per the Preventing Sex Trafficking and Strengthening Families Act, Requirements to Identify, Document, Report, and Provide Services to Child Sex Trafficking Victims policy, and internal policy affecting DJJOY, specific tools must be applied to the cases of children and youth in the care, custody, or supervision of OCFS, LDSS, or Voluntary Agencies. These tools are not used to interview youth. The optional screening tools described here can be used to interview youth to gather information to complete the required tools.

Screening should be used early in a youth’s case coordination as a regular procedure, even if trafficking or CSEC is not suspected. For more information about how and when to use standardized screening tools and for information about limitations and special considerations when screening for CSEC or child trafficking, refer to Responding to Commercially Sexually Exploited and Trafficked Youth: A Handbook for Child Serving Professionals (“the Handbook”).

OCFS Child Trafficking Initial Interview Tool

OCFS developed the NYS Office of Children and Family Services Child Trafficking Initial Interview Tool for direct service providers who need to quickly identify potential victims of CSEC and child trafficking. The tool was developed with the input of direct service providers from across the state for use with youth aged 12-21 during intake or early in the service delivery process. When used according to the accompanying guidance, the tool enables providers to identify potentially trafficked youth by asking yes or no questions related to a youth's experiences with employment and sex. For more information contact humantrafficking@ocfs.ny.gov.

Other Tools

Links to additional tools are provided below, however neither is tailored specifically for the child welfare population. Inclusion in this document does not represent OCFS endorsement of these tools, but they are provided for convenience. These tools include:

- Human Trafficking Interview and Assessment Measure, Covenant House & Fordham University, 2013.
 - This scientifically validated tool screens for sex and labor trafficking.
 - The tool was tested on 174 randomly sampled youth between 18 and 23 years old who accessed Runaway/Homeless Youth services in New York City.
- Trafficking Victim Identification Tool (long version and short version), Vera Institute of Justice, 2014.
 - This scientifically validated tool screens for sex and labor trafficking.
 - The tool was tested on 180 adult clients; an additional 53 administrative cases were screened.
 - Testing was conducted by 11 victim services agencies in New York, California, Colorado, Texas and Washington.

2. THREE-LEVEL SYSTEM

Two Three-Level Systems were developed independently in Monroe and Westchester Counties in 2013⁹. These Three-Level Systems allow providers to screen, assess, track, and offer targeted services to victims of child trafficking. In Westchester County, this system was developed within the Child Protection system; in Monroe County it was developed by a Runaway-Homeless Youth service provider. In 2015, OCFS used these models to create a statewide Three-Level System which is incorporated in OCFS' Requirements to Identify, Document, Report, and Provide Services to Child Sex Trafficking Victims policy.

⁹ The Westchester County Three-Level System was developed with support from Shared Hope International.

Levels

The levels are progressive.¹⁰

- Meeting federal definition as child trafficking victim. Includes youth who:
 - Exhibit at least one of the Meets Federal Definition indicators for sex trafficking according to OCFS Child Sex Trafficking Indicators Tool (attached to OCFS' Requirements to Identify, Document, Report, and Provide Services to Child Sex Trafficking Victims policy) AND/OR
 - Received confirmation of their trafficking status from Office of Temporary and Disability Assistance (OTDA) and Division of Criminal Justice Services (DCJS).
- High Level. Includes youth who:
 - Exhibit at least one of the high level indicators for sex trafficking according to the OCFS Child Sex Trafficking Indicators Tool (attached to OCFS' Requirements to Identify, Document, Report, and Provide Services to Child Sex Trafficking Victims policy) AND/OR
 - Exhibit indicators commonly associated with child trafficking that cause serious concerns.
- Medium Level. Includes youth who:
 - Exhibit at least one of the medium level indicators for sex trafficking according to the OCFS Child Sex Trafficking Indicators Tool (attached to OCFS' Requirements to Identify, Document, Report, and Provide Services to Child Sex Trafficking Victims policy) AND/OR
 - Exhibit indicators commonly associated with child trafficking that may indicate trafficking.

Although OCFS' Requirements to Identify, Document, Report, and Provide Services to Child Sex Trafficking Victims policy focuses exclusively on child sex trafficking, LDSS and service providers are strongly encouraged to identify and respond to instances of potential child labor trafficking as well.

These levels are used to identify survivors and direct tailored services, however, they should be seen as a continuum rather than as fixed points. Youth can move between levels as their situation changes or more information is shared. The Three-Level System is designed to allow for this movement as new information emerges.

¹⁰ These levels differ slightly from those included in the OCFS' Requirements to Identify, Document, Report, and Provide Services to Child Sex Trafficking Victims policy because providers are encouraged to identify and provide services to vulnerable youth who do not fall under the requirements of the Administrative Directive.

Key Elements

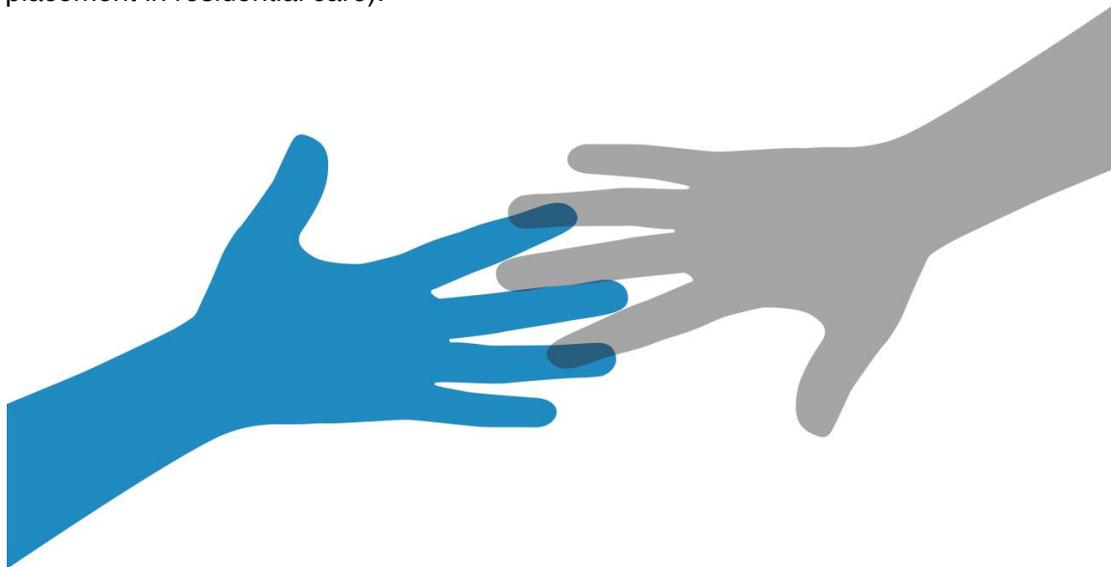

Services

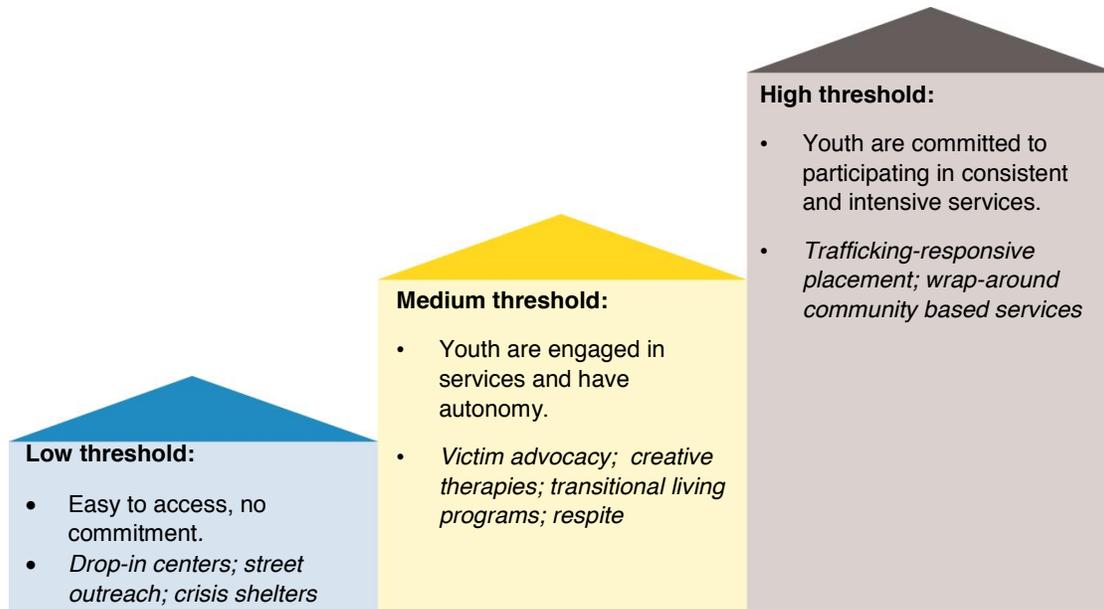

The Three-Level System is a tool to help service providers and LDSS workers provide youth with services tailored to their needs. All youth in the care, custody or supervision of an LDSS or OCFS who are identified as potential or identified survivors of child trafficking or CSEC must be offered services per OCFS' Requirements to Identify, Document, Report, and Provide Services to Child Sex Trafficking Victims policy.

In counties that receive Safe Harbour funding, the Safe Harbour Coordinator can be contacted to help screen and coordinate services. In counties that do not receive Safe Harbour funding, the LDSS Human Trafficking liaison and/or the local Child Advocacy Center can be contacted for these purposes. OCFS Regional Offices can be contacted to help connect with these professionals.

Appropriate services exist on a spectrum, ranging from low threshold where very little engagement or commitment is required from youth (for example drop-in centers for runaway and homeless youth) to high threshold where youth need to be very engaged and committed to the program in order to participate successfully (for example placement in residential care).

Spectrum of Services to meet the needs of Trafficked and Exploited Youth

There is no “one size fits all” when providing services to youth survivors of trafficking and commercial sexual exploitation. It is recommended that service providers engage youth in their service planning as much as possible to find the right fit of service(s) for each youth.

Data

Service providers and child welfare workers can use these levels to track the services a youth receives and track data—without duplication—on youth who have experienced trafficking or exploitation. When youth in the care, custody or supervision of LDSS are assigned a level, that level and corresponding services are to be entered into CONNECTIONS per OCFS’ Requirements to Identify, Document, Report, and Provide Services to Child Sex Trafficking Victims policy. When youth in the care, custody, or supervision of DJJOY are assigned a level, that level and corresponding services are to be entered into Juvenile Justice Information System (JJIS). Counties receiving Safe Harbour: NY funding also track data corresponding to Safe Harbour: NY services.

Training

In both Westchester and Monroe Counties, all agencies that use the level system are trained on child trafficking by a Safe Harbour: NY partner. After receiving training, these partners, including Child Protective Services workers, other LDSS employees, and youth-serving agencies and organizations, use their knowledge of identification and Available Tools and Resources to screen for child trafficking.

OCFS created several computer-based trainings (CBT) which are accessible through the Human Services Learning Center (HSLC). A one-hour CBT titled Human Trafficking/Commercially Sexually Exploited Children (CSEC): An Overview provides an introduction to human trafficking subjects. Anyone with access to HSLC is encouraged to use this free resource.

An additional CBT titled Child Welfare Requirements for Identifying and Working with Sex Trafficking Victims is mandatory for some professionals per the Requirements to Identify, Document, Report, and Provide Services to Child Sex Trafficking Victims policy. This recorded video training can also be accessed through HSLC.

3. RESPONDING TO COMMERCIALLY SEXUALLY EXPLOITED AND TRAFFICKED YOUTH: A HANDBOOK FOR CHILD SERVING PROFESSIONALS (“THE HANDBOOK”)

In 2016, OCFS released Responding to Commercially Sexually Exploited and Trafficked Youth: A Handbook for Child Serving Professionals. This document is intended to guide direct-care professionals through many of the common issues that arise when working with a youth who is vulnerable, trafficked, or sexually exploited. “Critical teams” are encouraged to familiarize themselves with this document and to share it with their local networks.

4. EXISTING HOTLINES

A number of hotlines function at the local, state, and federal levels that can respond to questions and concerns related to human trafficking, CSEC, and related issues. Rather than focus limited resources on developing a potentially duplicative new hotline, “critical teams” are encouraged to familiarize themselves with existing hotlines that may meet their needs. A list of hotlines related to human trafficking and CSEC that function at the state and national levels are included in Appendix 5: Anti-Trafficking Hotlines and Helplines.

It may be helpful for counties to partner with existing hotlines so they can be engaged in the local response. Counties may be able to include hotline numbers in policies and protocol related to youth who have experienced CSEC or trafficking, coordinate with hotlines to streamline referrals, and collect data on calls made from their localities.

5. CONFIRMATION PROCESS

The confirmation process was established under New York's 2007 anti-trafficking law to rapidly connect trafficking survivors with criminal relief and access to social services. This process is jointly administered by the New York State Office of Temporary and Disability Assistance (OTDA) and the New York State Division of Criminal Justice Services (DCJS).

Referrals for confirmation can be made by law enforcement representatives as well as any established legal and social services provider who reasonably believes their client may be a victim of human trafficking. Referral forms are included in Appendix 6: Confirmation Referral Form: Social Services and Legal Providers.

A referral of a potential trafficking victim for confirmation triggers a response involving a number of resources and referrals. Confirmation is required for some adult immigrant victims of trafficking to receive services, however confirmation is not required for minors to access social services related to their trafficking situation. When minor victims are referred for confirmation, their LDSS is notified and required to provide an assessment of services required by the youth.

Confirmation is not required for minors to access social services.

Although not required, securing confirmation for a minor victim can offer benefits that might not otherwise be obtainable, such as:

- Providing validation to survivors that government agencies believe their story and recognize them as survivors;
- Assisting minor victims who need to secure immigration status or vacate convictions by providing valid government documents attesting to their situation;
- Pulling together a number of stakeholders to provide appropriate services for the youth who may not otherwise be aware of the situation; and
- Assisting the state in gaining a better understanding of the numbers of trafficking victims so it can better serve victims and prevent new victimization.

Potential survivors of human trafficking do not need an open investigation or proof that trafficking occurred; the referral need only document the survivor's story in a way that indicates the person was engaged in a trafficking situation through force, fraud, or coercion. Survivors do not need to cooperate with a law enforcement investigation in order to be referred for confirmation.

Conduct Public Awareness Campaigns

To communicate about CSEC and child trafficking, local, state, and federal entities have conducted public awareness campaigns which can be used to inform the community and garner support for anti-trafficking efforts, to educate the community about common red flags, to communicate whom community members can contact to report a tip or ask for help, or for a variety of other purposes.

STEPS TO DEVELOP A PUBLIC AWARENESS CAMPAIGN

1. Research the issue.
2. Identify the goals of the campaign.
3. Identify the target audience.
4. Identify the best delivery method.
5. Clarify and tailor the message.
6. Analyze the effectiveness of the campaign.

1. RESEARCH THE ISSUE

Before a public awareness campaign can begin, the issues of the commercial sexual exploitation of children and child trafficking need to be understood by the “critical team”. This is an ongoing process, and receiving training as a team will be useful. (For more information refer to Develop a County Training Plan.) Creating a campaign from a shared knowledge base can help the team to use consistent, agreed-upon language to describe the issue, both in campaign materials and in any subsequent interviews or press that may come as a result of the campaign.

2. IDENTIFY THE GOALS OF THE CAMPAIGN

In planning public awareness activities, it is helpful to establish clear goals. Consider what the “critical team” would like to convey to the community. Is it to inform the community that child trafficking is a local issue? Is it to educate the community on red flags of trafficking to identify more survivors? Agreeing on one or two campaign goals early on will enable the “critical team” to create clear and concise messaging.

3. IDENTIFY THE TARGET AUDIENCE

Once the campaign goal has been established, the “critical team” can identify the target audience. The target audience could be the community at large, or it could be a subset of the community (e.g. parents, teachers, or doctors). Identifying the target audience will help the “critical team” as it continues to refine and articulate messaging based on the campaign’s stated goals.

4. IDENTIFY THE BEST DELIVERY METHOD

Understanding the campaign's target audience can help the "critical team" determine which method(s) will most effectively reach its goal(s). Some campaigns rely on print material, such as posters, flyers, and billboards, while others use videos or other media. Public awareness campaigns can take many forms and can be delivered using almost any method of communication available. Examples from strong campaigns are included in Appendix 7: Strong Examples from Public Awareness Campaigns. After determining which media the "critical team" intends to leverage, the team can consider venues where campaign materials can be displayed, such as billboards, bus and train stops, and signs in bathrooms, or as public service announcements (PSAs) during movie previews or on local television or radio stations.

5. CLARIFY AND TAILOR THE MESSAGE

Strong campaigns do not rely heavily on statistics, but convey a clear fact or message that appeals to the audience emotionally and intellectually.

The "critical team" is encouraged to review campaigns produced by government and non-profit agencies and consider which were most impactful and why. In many cases, the team may be able to use existing campaign materials with permission. Materials such as posters and pamphlets produced by the state and federal governments can be ordered free of charge¹¹.

It is strongly advised that all campaign materials refer the audience to a central source if they need assistance or have questions. Using an established hotline, such as the National Human Trafficking Resource Center is encouraged. For a list of established hotlines, see Appendix 5: Anti-Trafficking Hotlines and Helplines.

In choosing images for public awareness campaigns the "critical team" must be sensitive to the message it is trying to convey. Images should be impactful but not salacious. Examples of strong images and images that should not be used are included in Appendix 7: Strong Examples from Public Awareness Campaigns and Appendix 8: Images to Avoid in Public Awareness Campaigns.

Plan to release campaigns in conjunction with other anti-trafficking events, for example during January, which is National Human Trafficking Awareness Month. For a list of relevant dates, see Appendix 9: Opportunities to Raise Awareness.

6. ANALYZE THE EFFECTIVENESS OF THE CAMPAIGN

Analyzing the impact of a public awareness campaign can be very helpful to groups. Conducting such an analysis would enable the team to refine its messaging and materials for future campaigns; however, very few organizations have the resources necessary to conduct a true analysis.

¹¹ To view and order free copies of materials produced by the Administration for Children and Families visit <http://www.acf.hhs.gov/programs/orr/rescue-campaign>

Some simple analyses can be conducted to determine if the campaign had the intended effects. If the campaign's goal was to start community dialogue on the subject of human trafficking and CSEC the "critical team" might consider whether there was any press coverage of the campaign, or whether an increase in inquiries on the subject were made to offices of the "critical team" members. If the campaign's goal was to educate the community on how to identify potential youth survivors, the team can consider whether an increase in referrals was observed following the campaign. Although neither of these methods is rigorous or scientifically sound, they can provide some indication to the team as to whether goals were met. For more information about setting goals for awareness campaigns see Identify the goals of the campaign.

Create Youth Outreach Materials

Youth outreach can take many forms. Outreach often describes face-to-face meetings with an organization’s target population conducted outside of an agency. This form of outreach is critical in engaging vulnerable youth in services and a number of organizations have models that can be replicated. This document will discuss creating direct outreach materials that can be distributed to youth to inform them of available services.

Creating youth outreach materials can help the “critical team” to reach and respond to trafficked, exploited, and vulnerable young people in the community. Youth may be unaware of the services available to them, or may need encouragement to reach out to resources of which they are aware.

KEY CONSIDERATIONS IN DEVELOPING YOUTH OUTREACH MATERIALS

1. Consider ways to communicate safely with vulnerable youth.
2. Involve youth in the creation of materials.

1. CONSIDER WAYS TO COMMUNICATE SAFELY WITH VULNERABLE YOUTH

When youth are being trafficked it is not safe for them to carry certain items. Before creating outreach materials for exploited and trafficked youth, it is advised that “critical teams” carefully consider what items can be used to safely distribute information to youth. Consulting with survivor-run organizations and youth in the community can be especially helpful during this process. See Involve youth in the creation of materials for more information.

Some items that might be safe include:

- Lip balm
- Pocket packs of tissues
- Mirror compacts
- Bars of soap
- Tampons

For the safety of potential survivors in your community, don't publicize services until they are ready to receive new clients.

These items can be printed with information (such as a hotline number), or information could be affixed via a sticker that can easily be removed.

Special attention should be paid to the message conveyed in the outreach materials. Most youth who have experienced trafficking or CSEC do not identify with these terms and may not realize the materials are directed toward them. Rather, youth will often refer to these experiences as “the life” or “the game.” It is recommended that “critical teams” use language used by the youth with whom they are trying to connect.

It is recommended that materials do not carry messages about “safety,” “freedom,” “help” or similar words as they might alienate youth or place them in danger. Instead, “critical teams” can be creative in the way they communicate their message. For example, one Safe Harbour program in the Hudson Valley developed an image of a bar code embedded with the phone number to the National Human Trafficking Resource Center. This clever idea may prove to be an example of how phone numbers and other communications can be carried by trafficked and exploited youth without raising the suspicions of traffickers.

2. INVOLVE YOUTH IN THE CREATION OF MATERIALS

Youth in the community, especially vulnerable youth, can be a “critical team’s” strongest asset as it seeks to connect youth with services. Should the team elect to partner with youth in developing outreach materials, it might consider whether it seeks input from all youth in the community or whether it seeks participation from a targeted group of youth (for example youth in care, survivors of trafficking, etc.). Doing so will enhance the effectiveness of a team’s efforts to engage youth from the target population.

Efforts to engage youth in the creation of project materials should include information about the “critical team’s” efforts and what will be asked of them. Partner can be asked to encourage youth to join the initiative, and incentives, such as cash or in-kind stipends, publicity applauding the youths’ work, or credit for volunteer or community service hours, can be offered at the “critical team’s” discretion.

To protect the safety of youth who are interested in participating in the project, it is strongly advised that the “critical team” provide an orientation that explains the subject matter and purpose of the initiative. Any potential benefits and risks to participating youth must be clearly articulated before youth engage in any work. It is imperative that the “critical team” be prepared to support youth during and after the initiative, and that the team establish protocol for a response should a youth disclose a trafficking or exploitive situation during the course of their efforts.

To safely engage vulnerable youth in programming, youth participants must be supported throughout and after their participation. They should be aware of what supportive services are available and how those services can be accessed. Youth survivors of trafficking and other forms of exploitation should not be pressured to participate; the health and safety of a youth should never be compromised during the course of these efforts.

Youth who wish to participate in the “critical team’s” initiative can provide input on outreach campaigns designed by the “critical team,” or youth can be asked to create their own materials. Youth may provide input on specific messaging, language, and imagery, as well as provide information about how to best distribute materials to youth.

Youth can be involved in a number of ways. Suggestions include:

- Host a competition with prizes
The “critical team” may elect to host a competition for local youth, or a subset of local youth (for example youth in care) to create a poster or Public Service Announcement to raise awareness about child trafficking and CSEC.
- Conduct focus groups
The “critical team” may host focus groups to collect youth feedback on materials it has created and how those materials can be effectively disseminated to youth in the community.
- Leverage peer mentors
The “critical team” may ask for input from existing peer support programs (where available). Trained peer mentors can be engaged to provide feedback and ask for feedback from the peers they support. Such groups could also be engaged to disseminate the final materials.
- Engage youth to conduct a social media campaign
Youth may express that the best way to communicate with them is via social media. Many programs and agencies are restricted from using social media to connect with youth. Incentivizing youth to develop a social media campaign could be a creative solution for communicating a message and empowering youth while teaching a professional skill set.

Develop Referral Pathways

Creating referral pathways can help to streamline the service delivery and case coordination between multiple agencies or programs. A robust system of referral pathways can eliminate the need to “reinvent the wheel” each time a case is identified.

STEPS TO DEVELOP REFERRAL PATHWAYS

1. Identify common needs among CSEC and trafficked youth.
2. Leverage existing partnerships to meet identified needs.
3. Fill remaining service gaps.
4. Publicize referral pathways.

1. IDENTIFY COMMON NEEDS AMONG CSEC AND TRAFFICKED YOUTH

Referral pathways that account for the most commonly identified service needs can be developed with help from the county’s service network (for more information see 5. Develop a County-Wide Asset Map). “Pathways” can be assigned based on each agency’s capacity to meet specific needs, with consideration for service eligibility criteria. A pathway might be determined by immigration status, gender, trafficking experience, or other factors. Each participating agency in a pathway should have a common understanding of the issues of child trafficking and the commercial sexual exploitation of children.

2. LEVERAGE EXISTING PARTNERSHIPS TO MEET IDENTIFIED NEEDS

When establishing referral pathways, it is helpful to leverage existing partnerships, particularly those developed through the “critical team.” Partners can be considered for participation based on organizations’ expressed interest, demonstrated capacity, geographic coverage, and service offerings.

3. FILL REMAINING SERVICE GAPS

If a service gap remains after existing partnerships have been utilized, the “critical team” can fill these gaps by offering training to additional partners. Each organization that participates in the referral pathway process should be trained on CSEC, child trafficking, and related victim-service issues, preferably with information endorsed by the “critical team.” For more information refer to Develop a County Training Plan.

4. PUBLICIZE REFERRAL PATHWAYS

The Child Trafficking Coordinator can develop a local resource guide that includes all trained, participating agencies. (For more information on Child Trafficking Coordinators, refer to Designate a County Child Trafficking Coordinator.) This resource guide would be updated periodically and shared with each participating agency. A copy should also be provided to the Statewide Central Register (SCR) of Child Abuse and Maltreatment so they may add the guide to their resource directory under a dedicated section for child trafficking victims.

An example referral pathway is included in Appendix 10: Sample Sex Trafficking and CSEC Service Referral Pathway: LDSS. Although each pathway does not need to be illustrated in such a format, identifying key agencies and contacts and when each can be leveraged will help the county to quickly and effectively respond to youth's needs.

Conclusion

Child welfare systems have an obligation to create youth-and family-centered responses that build a web of protection and support. This Blueprint outlines the most critical elements for counties to develop when creating or supporting the service infrastructure vital to meeting the needs of trafficked, sexually exploited, and vulnerable youth. While the system response may vary slightly from county to county, these elements can enable counties across New York State to develop a robust, client-centered infrastructure that meets the needs of youth survivors while empowering LDSS to adhere to enacted federal and state legislation.

Although developing and implementing these elements may pose a challenge or, at times, feel counterintuitive to some partners, those counties who have entered the work in a spirit of collaborative partnership have proven that these challenges can be met so the safety and well-being of vulnerable youth in New York State can be upheld.

Through this work, New York State can truly offer a Safe Harbour to our most vulnerable young people.

TO REPORT EMERGENCIES AND TIPS

9-1-1

Dialing "9-1-1" from any telephone will link the caller to an emergency dispatch center which can send emergency responders to the caller's location. 9-1-1 should be called in any situation where immediate danger is present.

These are strong examples because they:

- Use silhouette images which are race and age neutral;
- Do not reinforce common stereotypes or misconceptions about survivors of child trafficking;
- Are not salacious or sensational in nature;
- Communicate a fact or case example; and
- Dictate next steps (share a number to call for help or information).

APPENDIX 8: IMAGES TO AVOID IN PUBLIC AWARENESS CAMPAIGNS

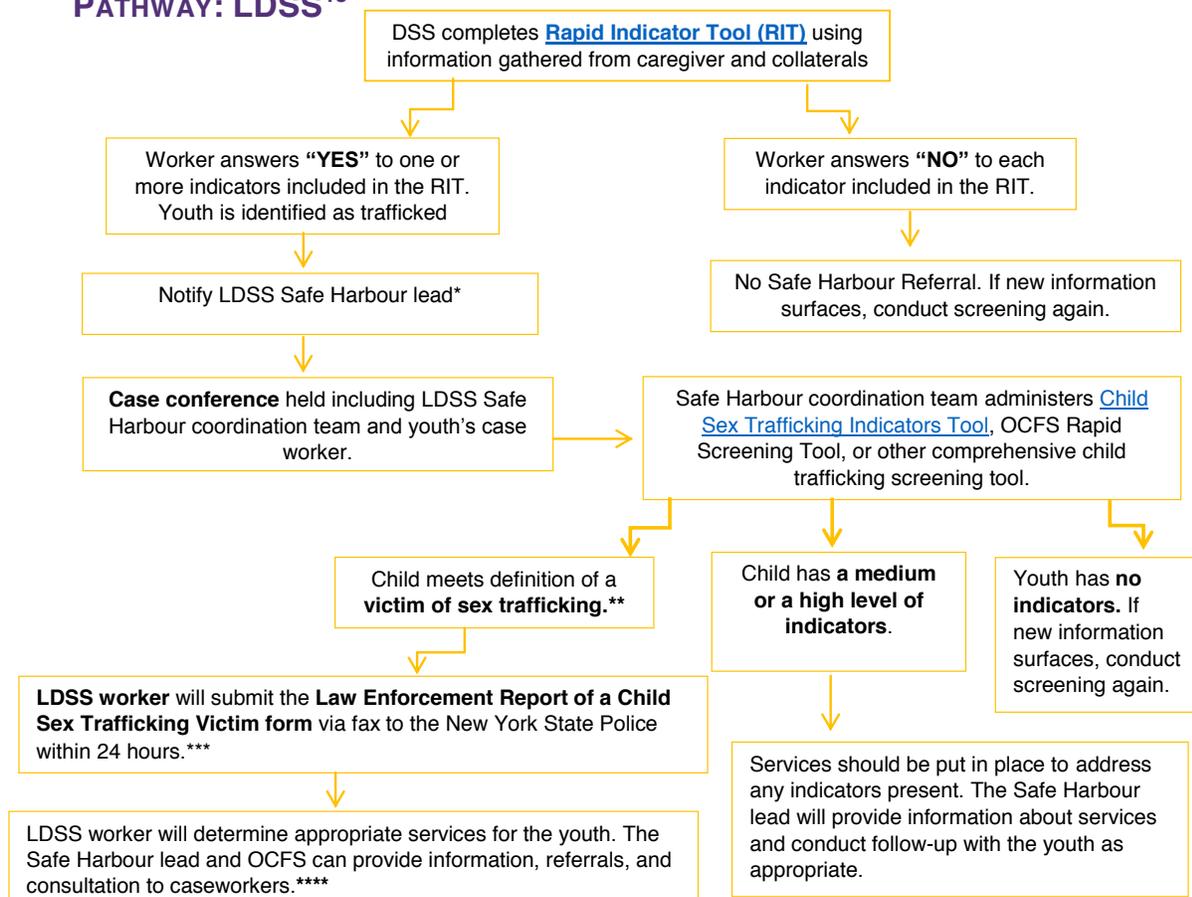

These are examples of images that should be avoided because they:

- Reinforce common misconceptions about victim demographics;
- Reinforce inaccurate conceptions about rescuing victims (rather than empowering them);
- Are sensational in nature;
- Reinforce common misconceptions about confinement in trafficking and CSEC situations.
